The match was very exciting from start to finish and proved conclusively that Edmonton has splendid material in training for senior hockey honors in a few years. The final score stood 8 to 3 in favor of the town boys. The line up of the teams was:—

CASHEL'S ESCAPE

Calgary Herald Tells the Story of the Escape of the Condemned Murderer.

"A little after 5 o'clock the day guard prepared to put things in readiness for the night guard which was due at 6.30 o'clock. Constable Piper who had charge of the guard room, ordered Casbel from his cell to a bench at the end of the corridor from which the cells lead. Casbel, when seated on this bench, had his back to a window which faced the street. As soon as Casbel took a seat on the bench, Constable Piper entered his cell and commenced to look through it to see if anything had been left there during the day. Concluding his search, Piper called on Casbel to return to his cell. Casbel took a couple of steps from the bench on which he was seated, and stopped. Constable Leslie was on guard outside the cell, while Constable Phillips was behind Casbel, up the corridor. When Casbel did not enter his cell promptly, the constables took a step towards him and were confronted with Casbel covering them with two shining long barreled 38 calibre revolvers. Casbel ordered them to make no move on a threat of blowing their brains out. Calmly he took two or three steps backward and got Constable Phillips in line with his weapons.

"He then ordered the three men into his cell. Getting them there, he demanded their revolvers and cartridges belts, which two of the constables carried. Securing these, he backed out of the cell, keeping his men covered, even while he locked the cell door. Going along the corridor, Casbel secured the keys with which to unlock his shackles.

"Casbel's face, during this performance, was as white as death, the men say, but he had such a look of determination that had he fired one shot, he would not have stopped until he had killed the three constables. He told them that he was a desperate man, fighting for his life, and that nothing was going to stop him. Just before he left the guard room, Casbel went to his own cell, and with a light hearted 'goodbye, boys, he bid farewell to the constables. All this took but a few minutes, for by actual time the condemned murderer stepped from the guard house at 6.15 o'clock.

"Casbel's escape was not known until half past six o'clock, thereby giving him a clear lead of fifteen minutes in his race for life. At 6.30 o'clock the night guard arrived at the guard room, and it took but a few seconds to learn the serious state of affairs. The locked up constables in a few words told Casbel's escape, and while one of the guards rushed back to headquarters to report the escape, another of the guards broke open the lock that held the door which has for months been between Casbel and his liberty. Five minutes after the news had been reported to the officers, patrols of mounted men were hurriedly dispatched to all the trails leading out of the city. So great was their hurry to get after the escaped man that some of the constables even rode out into the stormy night without overcoats. Men were sent to search and watch all the half-frozen encampments around the city, and such houses as would be thought Casbel might take refuge in. Descriptions of Casbel and the news that he had escaped were sent in all directions. The railways were watched and every road leading out of the city was patrolled by constables last night, but there was never a sign of the missing man.

"Immediately after Casbel's escape, the Mounted Police lost not a minute in hunting up the condemned man's brother. Constables were alerted up town, and half an hour after the escape, John Casbel was in custody. He was arrested on Stephen avenue, while walking eastward.

"Where did the revolvers come from? was the question which was on everybody's lips after hearing of Casbel's escape. Two visitors were to see Casbel yesterday, Rev. G. W. Kerby, who has been visiting him daily since his conviction, and his brother, John Casbel.

"The watch were sure that nothing was left with Casbel during these visits, and the supposition is that the two revolvers were handed in through the window when Casbel was placed on the bench at the end of the corridor. To support this theory, tracks were found outside of the window in the snow, but they could not be followed far.

"No trace whatever could be secured of Casbel after his leaving the guard room. A visit was paid to every livery stable in the city, for it was believed that Casbel would have tried to make his escape on horseback. All of the horses in the livery barns could be accounted for, so the police think that he either got a horse from some private source, or started off on foot. Casbel when he effected his escape did not have on prison attire, but was garbed in civilian clothes. He had on a dark grey coat and vest, with a thin stripe through it, a pair of dark grey trousers, and a brown felt fedora.

Pointer S THE FELT SHOE PROBLEM

"The nicest I have seen since I left Toronto, and just as cheap, too." That is what an Ontario lady said the other day, while buying a silk blouse at the Hudson's Bay stores. That is what YOU'LL say, too.

And blouse lengths, too. People who see ours don't often buy elsewhere. You wouldn't.

And blouse lengths: A few of those wash silks felt at $1.50 for blouse length, also at $2.50 and $4. Lovely French flannels, daintiest patterns, at $1.25 and $1.50 the length.

The next assembly will show no daintier or more effective gown than can be made up from any one of a few pieces of dainty chiffon and silk organdies, with plenty of rich trimmings to match, at the Hudson's Bay stores.

Opera shawls, very handsome, silk and finest wool: couldn't imagine anything daintier or handsomer. Worth at least a half more than asked for them; also silk fascinators. Hudson's Bay stores.

People of good taste are greatly pleased with the fine china and cut glass, etc., being shown at the Hudson's Bay stores. The most attractive goods ever shown in Edmonton.

A lot of very handsome silk collars and lace ties received this week. Very dainty and the latest New York productions. Also the correct thing in silk belts. A nice present. Ties easily sent in a letter. Hudson's Bay stores.

Some people don't know that you can buy playing cards at the Hudson's Bay stores. Many others, who are particular about their cards, always go there for them. It's a good habit and it pays.

Aprons are a strong line at the Hudson's Bay stores. Many beautiful lines in white muslin and lawn. You'll give up making aprons when you see these. Costs nothing to see them.

The Hudson's Bay Stores.

W. P. Marsh, who has been held on a charge of bigamy to Cashe, saw the whole thing. He says that the revolver was absolutely new, and that from one thing the price ticket, Cashe, he declared, was as cool and deliberate as any man could be, from the time he pulled out the revolver until he left the guard room. He had the look of a desperate man, and it was believed that he would have had no hesitancy in shooting any of the guards who stood between him and liberty.

Rev. G. W. Kerby visited Cashe yesterday as usual, and was surprised when informed at midnight last night that Cashe had escaped. Mr. Kerby said to the Herald representative that during his visit yesterday Cashe seemed nervous and nervous, but he attributed that to his anxiety to hear something definite from his legal representative P. J. Nolan, who was at Ottawa endeavoring to secure a new trial. Mr. Kerby was at a loss to know how the revolver could have been placed in Cashe's possession, as John Cashe was never allowed in the cell with his convicted brother, but conversed through the bars of the cell door.

Ever since Ernest Cashe has been confined to the guardroom of the Northwest Mounted Police barracks, he has been a most exemplary prisoner up to the time of his escape. He chatted away with the guards, never made any kick about anything, and was never the cause of the least bit of trouble.

The sole topic of conversation on the streets today is the escape of Cashe. Everybody wants to know the latest developments in the case, but they are forced to go with very little new information.

"At the police barracks all is bustle. Descriptions and information are being sent to every part of the country and particular attention is being paid to all trains and railroads which lead to the United States, because most people suppose that the escaped man will endeavor to cross the line into Montana.

The anxiety of the people for information was demonstrated by the many telephone calls which The Herald had to answer today. "Is it true that Cashe has escaped?" dozens have asked over the phone, and when the report has been confirmed, several asked which direction he had gone, and other questions of a similar character which the scribbles in the paper could not answer.

A reward of $1,000 has been offered for the capture of Cashe by the government. The reward is for the man dead or alive. There is a strong feeling that Cashe will be prepared to fight desperately for his life if cornered by the police.

"Yesterday afternoon Dr. Sanson was visited by a couple of young men, one claiming that he was afraid of blood poisoning developing in his arm as the result of a couple of superficial cuts on the fingers of his hand. The young man was very anxious that he should be given bandages for the wounds. While Dr. Sanson thought there was no fear of blood poisoning, he gave the bandages. When through the young man said that he was John Cashe. Upon entering the office at first, he took off his overcoat, and when the consultation was through, the doctor went to assist the young man with his overcoat, but Cashe's companion immediately said, 'Oh no, I'll help him on with his coat.' It was noticeable, too, that Cashe did not put his arms through his coat sleeves, but threw it across his shoulders, as if there might have been something in them.

"There were many rumors around the city to-day, one to the effect that only a day or two ago, a man answering John Cashe's description, purchased a revolver from a hardware merchant.

"Cashe will be well prepared to make a strong stand if caught in a corner, because he has the two Mounted Police revolvers which he took from the guards, and the two which he came by in such a mysterious manner. With the police revolvers, he has two belts of ammunition."
